Explore the carefully preserved ruins in Paestum, which the Greeks founded around 600 BC as the city of Poseidonia, and see many of its excavated artifacts in the archaeological museum. The remains of three of the world's finest ancient Greek temples still stand at Paestum. Two of them are dedicated to the goddess Hera, the other to Athena. Excavations began in the 18th century and the wonders that have been unearthed present a fascinating glimpse into the world of the ancient Greeks and Romans. At the archaeological museum in Paestum, you will likely see a collection of terra cotta statues, decorative stone carvings of dancing women and war heroes, and a funerary painting of a man diving into water that may represent his transition into the afterworld.
